Diplomats on both sides intend-ed the Geneva sessions as an unmistakable sign that, after five years of saber-rattling and recriminations, the two superpowers are going to try to get along.

At the same time, Soviet and American officials remain skeptical about prospects for arms control. Despite the progress here and the agreement to continue talking, the two sides are still far apart.

Officials on both sides Tuesday night described the talks as procedural and philosophical, with few exchanges on specific issues. Moscow won a major procedural concession by getting the American side to agree to the objective of "preventing an arms race in space." Previously, the administration had been willing only to "discuss" the arms race in space.

And Mr. Shultz gained Soviet agreement that the negotiations on space include ground-based missile defense systems as well as spacebased systems. Previously, Moscow wanted to talk only about spacebased missiles.

The United States and the Soviet Union announced late Tuesday night that they had reached a compromise agreement on resuming negotiations on limiting and reducing nuclear arms and on "preventing an arms race in space."

The agreement on the goals and format for the talks was worked out during two days of what were described as often sharp debate.

The agreement means that after 13 months in which no arms control negotiations have been held, the two sides have agreed under a new format to resume the talks on limiting medium-range missiles and on reducing strategic arms. Both these negotiations had been halted by the Soviet Union.

The goal of the two days of talks had only been to establish the framework for future talks on nuclear and space issues, not to negotiate details of such an accord. Mr. Shultz said on his return their Western counterparts in proclaiming the Geneva agreement as only a first step. "Fears vanished with the news — there will be negotiations," Izvestia reported.

Despite attempts to present Geneva as a triumph of the rationality of Soviet policy, reports and comment were kept to the newspapers' foreign policy pages.

Mr. Kornilov, of Tass, warned that the new negotiations would require a more flexible attitude from the United States on the issue of anti-missile space weapons if they were to succeed.

Kennedy Visits Wife Of Mandela

The Associated Press

BRANDFORT, South Africa — Senator Edward M. Kennedy met Wednesday for an hour with the wife of Nelson Mandela, the imprisoned black leader and major symbol for opponents of apartheid in South Africa. The Massachusetts Democrat embraced Winnie Mandela, and the two went into her modest home near Brandfort.

"Winnie Mandela is a source of inspiration for people all over the world who care about freedom and who care about human rights, who care about the family," Mr. Kennedy said afterward.

"She has demonstrated this by her life and her commitment, her love of this country, her love of her family, her love of her husband," said the senator, who is in the fifth day of a visit to South Africa. Mr. Kennedy met alone with Mrs. Mandela, who is under a banning order that restricts her to this small farm town 348 kilometers (216 miles) south of Johannesburg, prevents her from meeting with more than one person at a time and prohibits South African news organizations from quoting her.

She said before the meeting with Mr. Kennedy: "We welcome peo-ple like him who are sympathetic to our cause. He is most welcome. We welcome international pressure imposed on South Africa." But she added, "We have never thought that our salvation is from outside in our struggle."

Mrs. Mandela, 50, who has been banned for all but 10 months of the last 23 years, said she has been arrested repeatedly for "technical violations of her banning order." Despite recent press speculation that South Africa's white-minority government might release her hus-

Signed by General Charles A. Gabriel, air force chief of staff, the new manual incorporates an earlier air force text on space warfare that General Gabriel signed in 1982. That document, "Military Space Doctrine," spells out what the air force sees as the need to develop space-based weapons and train space forces

The air force is developing a satellite-killing rocket that has been tested twice. In addition, the Pentagon launched its Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known the "star wars" program, in response to a call from President Ronald Reagan to develop weapons that could shoot down nuclear missiles.

The Reagan administration has argued that space has been "militaized" for years, with surveillance satellites, intercontinental ballistic missiles that fly through space and, in the Soviet Union, an existing anti-satellite weapon.

However, the U.S. Air Force manual makes clear that the military is prepared to move well beyoud satellites and ballistic mis-

"Space-based weapon systems could contribute to deterrence in seacetime and to more rapid conflict termination or increased survivability in war," it says.

As more and more officials in the administration came to say, they had to show they were able to manage Soviet-American relations or else forfeit support from allies and the American public.

To make the equation even more complicated, President Ronald Reagan announced a year ago that he would give new emphasis to developing space-based defenses to protect people against missile at-tacks. And he argued that the whole basis of nuclear deterrence had to be reconsidered. Instead of relying on the power to destroy, he maintained, the emphasis should be on defense.

This idea, it seemed, both fright-ened the Russians and impelled them to return to the bargaining table. Soviet leaders demanded agreement to avoid the militarization of outer space.

The result was Geneva, not so much because officials on either side believed there was much hope for arms control but because of the realization that overall relations could not otherwise be improved.

Savimbi Reported Seriously Wounded

LISBON (AFP) — Jonas Savimbi, the Angolan rebel leader, has been seriously wounded during an attack by government forces on his head-quarters in the south of the country, the Portuguese news agency said Wednesday.

In a dispatch from Luanda, the Angolan capital, the agency quoted Angolan military sources as saying the attack by elite troops in helicopters with heavy air support took place late last month. Filipino Minister Admits Rebel Gains

MANILA (NYT) - Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile warned Wednesday that the Communist insurgency in the Philippines was becoming increasingly bold and effective, noting that a "serious upsurge" in rebel activities resulted in the deaths of 2,000 civilians and military personnel last year. Mr. Enrile described the insurgents' operations as "the most formida-ble threat to our national security today," adding that during the past year the rebels had increased the size, scope and sophistication of their ulitary operations. His remarks, made in a luncheon address, were the most detailed appraisal to date from a high-ranking government official of the insurgency's recent gains. Mr. Enrile termed the situation a "crisis," adding that the insurgents aimed to gain sufficient popular support to threaten the current government. "The grand design is to forge not only a military stalemate." he said, "but a so-called strategic stalemate with the government in all its political, economic, social and psychological dimensions."

Time Jury to Get Secret Israeli Data

NEW YORK (AP) - A U.S. district judge ruled Wednesday that the jury in Ariel Sharon's $50-million libel suit against Time magazine will be allowed to hear evidence from secret Israeli documents and also will be told of Time's reservations about the information.

The Israeli government released on Monday the answers to three written questions submitted by Judge Abraham D. Sofaer about the secret documents that Israel had previously refused to provide for security reasons. On Wednesday, Judge Sofaer ruled that the complete Israeli reply to his questions was admissible as evidence, as well as a complaint by Time's Israeli lawyer, Chaim Zadok, that he was not allowed to see all the secret documents that the magazine deemed "crucial" to its defense. Time asserted in its Feb. 21, 1983, issue that General Sharon, then Israel's defense minister, had "discussed" with Lebanese Christian Phalangists the need for revenge for the assassination of President-elect Bashir Gemayal the day before the Phalangists killed hundreds of Palestinians in Beirut in 1982. The magazine has contended that the information to back up its article was contained in the secret documents, which were part of an Israeli commission's investigation of the massacre.

Shipping Fraud Trial Starts in Greece
PIRAEUS, Greece (Reuters) — The trial of 25 people alleged to have mounted the biggest fraud in shipping history by scuttling a huge oil tanker after selling its cargo illegally to South Africa began in this Greek port Wednesday.

Accused are 18 Greeks — seamen or shipping agents — and seven people of other nationalities, including Frederick Soudan, the Lebanese-born American who owned the 92,228-ton Salem, which sank off Senegal

The charge sheet said the crew unloaded 180,000 tons of crude oil in the South African port of Durban without the consent of the Shell Oil Co. which owned the cargo. South Africa paid $44 million into Swiss bank accounts for the crude. It said, adding that the vessel was insured for $24 million and the oil for $56 million.

The simple answer is that Mr. Regan shifts where the president shifts and leans where the president leans. Rarely, since he was first appointed to the Treasury, has Mr. Regan stood apart from the president on the nation's major economic questions — the budget deficit, growth, taxes, budget cuts - that often produced open splits within the administration and sometimes even within the White House staff.

A supremely confident. self-assured executive, Mr. Regan said that it would be premature to dis-cuss changes he would make in the one that he engineered himself, in a White House. Mr. Baker's departure from the White House, expected in the spring, raises a variety of questions, principally whether his successor, Donald T. Regan, will be able to quickly build a staff of strategists and executives as effective as Mr. Baker's.

Some administration officials speculated that Richard Darman. the assistant to the president who is Mr. Baker's deputy and architect of strategy, also is likely to move over to Treasury to specialize in international finance, or eventually be-come the president's next budget director.

As a Republican who twice op-posed Mr. Reagan's bid for the White House, in behalf of President Gerald R. Ford in 1976 and George Bush in 1980, Mr. Baker was hired as an unexpected outsider in the early Reagan administration. Blacks Play More Powerful Roles in U.S. House

By Milton Coleman Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The Congressional Black Caucus, perennially written off by some detractors as a powerless social club. has assumed a new prominence in the House of Representatives. highlighted by the selection of of key committees.

Representative William H.
Gray 3d. Democrat of Pennsylvania, became chairman of the House Budget Committee last week. His selection followed by a few months the ascension of Representative Augustus F. Hawkins. Democrat of California. to chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

Black Caucus members, most of them with relatively safe seats, now head five of the 22 standing committees in the House.

Blacks also serve as chairmen of two of the five less-important select House committees and of several subcommittees. They also hold high-ranking seats on other influential House panels, includ-ing the Ways and Means Com-

Overail, 20 House members are black — one of every 22 House members, but one of every four of its committee chairmen.

Caucus members and others say this signals a "coming of age" of the black lawmakers, the advent of more sophisticated politicking and a long-sought focus for the caucus.

It also offers the black legislators the opportunity to have a stronger imprint on House legislation and a chance - collectively and individually — to play more powerful roles in Capitol Hill politics.

However, some wonder about the effect of the new strains on the black representatives to resolve their sometimes conflicting roles as spokesmen for their racially and economically integrated districts, for the poor, for black Americans in general and

"My guess is that in the Black Caucus in the next two to four vears, as they move into positions of leadership and prominence, there's going to be a sort of iden-tity crisis." said Norman J. Ornstein, a political scientist at the American Enterprise Institute.

"All of a sudden you can't as comfortably play the role of pur-ist or conscience." Mr. Ornstein said. "You can't ignore the needs of people who don't agree with you as chairman, or you won't be chairman very long "

Representative Mickey Leland. Mr. Dixon was chosen Friday to succeed another black, Representative Louis Stokes, Democrat of Ohio, as chairman of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, the House ethics panel.

Representative Ronald V. Dellums. Democrat of California, heads the District of Columbia Committee and the Armed Services subcommittee on military installations, Representative Par-ren J. Mitchell, Democrat of Maryland, heads the Small Business Committee, Mr. Leland is chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, and Representa-tive Charles B. Mr. Gray and Mr. Dixon won chairmanships with some help from relatively recent House rules that provide for rotating chairmanships and memberships on some panels. The others have benefited in large part from longevity that observers say is common among black members of the House.

Without that system, they contend, the three might not have ascended to their posts. And lacking an ironclad seniority system now, blacks are less likely to become chairmen of additional committees.

We don't really think that racism in this country has so diminished," Mr. Rangel said, "that given the opportunity to vote on individuals based on their experience and ability that we could overcome that without the assistance of the seniority system."

Observers say it is ironic that Mr. Gray, in only his fourth term, has become virtually the most powerful black in the House. But they also note that he won the chairmanship of the Budget Committee by exhibiting mastery of the political process in the

New Technique Could Replace Scalpel

LONDON (AP) - Researchers at London's Hammersmith Hospital have announced the successful development of what they say is a revolutionary new surgical technique that can make the scalpel redundant in many instances.

Professor David Allison, director of diagnostic radiology at the hospital's medical school, said the technique involves ultra-fine tubes "armed" with a variety of tiny implements and guided along veins and arteries to the kidneys, liver, brain and other parts of the body.

He said the tubes can be used to seal arteries after stabbings, road accidents or in the treatment of ulcers. Kidney stones and gallstones can also be removed using the new technique, and blocked arteries in the limbs, kidneys and even the heart can be cleared, Dr. Allison said.

Rare Whooping Cranes Branch Out

LARAMIE, Wyoming (NYT) - Wildlife researchers have found that some of the 160 endangered whooping cranes in the United States, which now inhabit summer and winter sites in four different areas, may soon make a fifth area — Wyoming —their permanent summer home. If a new whooping crane colony is established in Wyoming it will give the rare birds an additional area for propagation, thus enhancing the chances of increasing their population. In 1937 there were only 29 whooping cranes in the United States. The whoopers, as they are called, have been wintering in New Mexico and Texas and summering in Idaho and Canada. Researchers say a group of about nine now has taken up summer quarters in the upper Green

Mastodon Bones Unearthed in Texas

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - A downtown construction site has yielded mastodon bones, teeth and tusks, and experts said this week the pit may rank as North America's second-largest repository of bones from the prehistoric elephant-like beasts after a similar site in Missouri.

The bones, lying in what may have been a watering hole more than 10,000 years ago, were discovered 17 feet below street level by a backhoe operator who noticed a flash of ivory in a mound of gray clay.

Scientists used hand shovels Tuesday to sift through the damp soil where the first bone was found Dec. 30, while buildozers scooped up dirt from other parts of the excavation for a 22-story office tower. Mastodons died out more than 10,000 years ago, but at least one of the tusks discovered was well-preserved by the clay, Ludelius said.

Too Much Water Endangers Infants

WILMINGTON, Delaware (NYT) - Infants suffering from a wide variety of ailments, from simple restlessness to convulsions, may in fact be "drunk" on water.

If, for example, they are fed with excessive amounts of very diluted formula, they may develop an extremely rare but potentially fatal condition called water intoxication, according to Robert E. O'Connor of the Wilmington Medical Center in Wilmington, Delaware.

Body cells swell and cellular metabolism is disturbed. Symptoms are restlessness, nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, weakness and convulsions. However, Dr. O'Connor warned that giving infants too little water when they are ill may lead to dehydration.

Conditioned Reflexes Show Brain Controls Immune Defenses

By Harold M. Schmeck Jr.

A Russian physiologist Ivan Pavbecause they had been trained so that their brains associated the sound with the presence of food. Now, American scientists have evoked a similar conditioned reflex to show that the brain can exercise direct control over cells of the immune defense system, the body's main bulwark against disease. Other recent experiments in the United States and abroad have shown that the two hemispheres of the brain influence the immune defenses in different ways and that some brain chemicals have specific effects on immune cells.

It has long been known that the body's two most important windows on the outside world are the brain and immune defense system. Everything we hear, feel, see or imagine comes through the brain. And almost every virus, microbe or other foreign particle that invades the body triggers some kind of im-mune response. But the specific effects these two master systems exert on each other have been relatively little explored, partly because the interactions are so com-

Some ingeniously designed research is now beginning to reveal details of the brain's effects on the immune defenses. The findings have raised hopes that eventually the research may lead to better treatments for disorders in which the immunological defense system is deficient or active in some abnormal way.

One series of experiments has shown that the activity of certain immune defense cells called natural killer cells can be greatly enhanced by the brain's trained response to a totally extraneous stimulus from the outside world — a strong odor. The killer cells are part of the body's surveillance system that protects against invasion and probably against cancer.

I HE research was designed by Novera Herbert Spector of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, a unit of the National Insti-tutes of Health. The experiments were done mainly at the University of Alabama medical school in Birmingham by Brent Solvason, Vithal Ghanta and Raymond Hira-

In the new case, the animals' brains evidently acti-vated the immune defense without waiting for the poly I:C, just as the dogs had begun to salivate in the Paylovian experiments without waiting for the food to appear. In the new experiments, several different control groups of mice were given treatments that were similar but not identical to the injections and exposure to odor that were the crux of the research. This was done to make sure that the effect was really what it seemed to be and was not a result of some unforeseen aspect of the experiments. For example, some animals were exposed to the odor of camphor and given the injections in each of nine sessions. Then, in the 10th session, they were not exposed to the odor at all, but were given injections of harmless salt water.

When the two groups were compared, the scientists found that the animals in the experimental group - those given only the exposure to odor of camphor in the 10th session - had natural killer cell activity three times as great as the animals in the "control" group that lacked the exposure to the odor in the final

This threefold difference was strongly significant, Spector said. Furthermore, the animals that had been "conditioned" to the odor had 39 times as much activity of natural killer cells as another control group that was exposed to the odor of camphor and given injections of salt solution in each of 10 sessions.

'Nuclear Winter' Could Be Less Severe Than Predicted

By Lee Siegel

The Associated Press Los ANGELES — Long periods of sub-freezing weather are unlikely in a "nuclear winter," but smoke from a nuclear war still could block enough sunlight to drop summer temperatures to near freezing and destroy crops, re-

"The intensity of the cooling is not as great as originally pro-posed," said Alan Hecht of the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration, summarizing the findings by re-searchers at California's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory and Colorado's National Center for Atmospheric Research.

The new studies were based on some of the most sophisticated computer simulations yet develoned to estimate what might happen if a nuclear war set cities, industrial centers and forests afire, blocking sunlight and plunging Earth into a dark, cold "nuclear winter" for survivors.

The researchers found that a nuclear war during summer could reduce temperatures from the 70-to-90-degree range down to near freezing in the central portions of continents for shorter periods of time than envisioned in earlier studies, said atmospheric physicist Michael MacCracken. Plants have fed the world and cured its ills since life began. Now we're destroying their principal habitat at the rate of 50 acres every minute.

We live on this planet by courtesy of the earth's green cover. Plants protect fragile soils from erosion, regulate the atmosphere, maintain water supplies for agriculture and prevent formation of deserts. Without plants man could not survive.

Yet, knowing this, we are destroying our own life-support system at such an alarming rate that it has already become a crisis - a crisis for ourselves and an even bigger one for our children.

There is no villain - except ignorance and short-sightedness. The desperately poor people who live in the forests have to clear areas for crops and fuel, but they are doing this in such a way that they are destroying their very livelihood.

Arms Talks Are On Again

Secretary of State George Shultz went to Geneva to reopen arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union. Late Tuesday he fairly claimed "success." After 14 hours of talks with the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko, the two announced that their countries would soon start talking about space and nuclear arms (strategic and intermediate-range) with the ambitious aim of limiting and reducing their arsenals and eventually of eliminating them. So after a frosty 13-month interlude brought on by Moscow's boycott of the START and INF talks, the United States and the Soviet Union will be back at a table.

Each side, it appears, is giving up something to get there. Moscow dropped its rigid and noisy insistence — the Gorbachov line — that the "star wars" program be terminated as the first order of arms control business. The Reagan administration seems to have backed off its earlier position, asserted strongly in the days preceding the Geneva meeting, that it would not even consider submitting "star wars" to discussion with Moscow.

The upshot is that space arms will for the first time be included in a negotiation. The discussion of America's Strategic Defense Initiative, of special concern to Moscow, will allow the United States to press its concerns about what Mr. Shultz called "the erosion of the ABM treaty" — an evident reference to indications of Soviet cheating on that earlier accord. Along with space arms, there will also be talks on strategic and intermediate-range missiles, the familiar categories on which stalemate had already been achieved. This "complex of questions," in the Geneva communi-que's phrase, will be taken up by Soviet and U.S. delegations divided into three groups. There has been no movement in East-West arms control since the Soviets' invasion of Afghanistan in 1979. The labs and the production lines, however, have not been similarly inactive. Is there a place now for cautious hope that things are a bit different? Mr. Reagan is resuming negotiations not just because of peace" pressures, some perhaps self-generated, but because he feels his rearmament program has evened up the bargaining odds. The Soviets appear to have deep anxieties about America's tremendous technological thrust and thus a further incentive to deal.

A formidable backlog of disagreements and difficulties lies in the way of substantive progress. Only the "objectives," not the all-impor-tant details of Mr. Reagan's and the Kremlin's negotiating strategies, were pursued at Geneva. Still, it is good to have the two countries engaging again in what Secretary Shultz called "the necessary give and take," and agreeing finally to address the serious issues.

Baker to the Fire Station

The Treasury Department can only be strengthened by the switch of jobs between it possesses. The Treasury has not been well and the White House. In James A. Baker 3d it gets an extremely able administrator capable of imposing a consistency and purpose that Treasury policy has not often shown in the past four years. But Mr. Baker will be working in an administration that regards the matter of whether it really wants an economic policy, or needs one, as an open question.

Meanwhile, the imbalances in the American economy continue to grow. The most obvious of them is the federal budget delicit, but the more immediately dangerous is the deficit in international payments. That one leaves the United States vulnerable to sudden changes of mind on the part of foreign investors who do not necessarily have much concern for stability in America. Working at the Treasury in the months ahead is going to be like doing duty in a firehouse. As long as inflation stays relatively low and business keeps expanding, there will not be much to do beyond the usual routine polishing the fire engines' brass, in effect because the president does not see the need to do much. But if inflation starts to rise or the economy to slide, the bells will ring at the Treasury and the secretary will have to move very fast in highly technical operations that to Mr. Baker, are not familiar. He will need, first of all, to recruit a stronger staffed in recent years. The erosion in the structure of senior civil servants had been going on for some years before this administration came to office. In the past four years there have been visible gaps at the political level as well, particularly in the crucial areas of monetary affairs and international finance. If the dollar's very high exchange rate should suddenly drop, the strength of the performance in those offices would make a great difference to the administration and the record that it will leave in American politics.

Beyond the ability to respond with technical skill to an emergency, the next secretary of the Treasury will need to think carefully about the administration's machinery for making economic decisions. That machinery is not in good working order now. One of the principal jobs, the chairmanship of the economic advisers, is vacant. The Office of Management and Budget has only a limited role. Above all, there is the growing atmosphere of indifference to all the money troubles. The view at the White House is that those carping economists, with their dire predictions, are wrong once again and that things are going along very nicely. So they are, for the moment. But if that should change, it might change very quickly,

Other Opinion

A 'Happy Ending' in Geneva

When diplomats get together to talk about talks, their objective is to establish a framework for substantive negotiations. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko achieved that precise, limited and highly important objective during their two days of discussions in Geneva. We welcome the Geneva accord as the "important beginning" described by Mr. Shultz. The American and Soviet governments, despite their ideological differences, have no higher obligation to themselves or the world than to bring their nuclear rivalry under control.

- The Baltimore Sun.

The Geneva conference undeniably had a happy ending. It should not be forgotten that Mr. Shultz came to Geneva without expecting much to result. But the political will to reach an agreement was there. The Soviets have softened their position a great deal in the last few weeks, without obtaining the same degree of concessions from Washington.

- La Libre Belgique (Brussels).

The public, awash in television hype, must desperately need a primer to the almost hysterical focus on the Shultz-Gromyko encounter. Before the Reagan era, such a meeting in Geneva would have been routine unto boredom. Today it has the air of a Second Coming.

Wars, even cold wars fought by proxy with big defense budgets, are essentially political struggles; and to win them you must gain and hold the political high ground. Here the Reagan administration has seriously defaulted. The sterility of the administration's record in nuclear arms negotiation, exacerbated by Soviet propaganda and bluster, has steadily eroded the unity and patience of America's European allies. I think it probable that Ronald Reagan, whose judgment is often superior to his advice, has at last sensed this.

Soberly viewed, the Shultz-Gromyko talks may be merely the latest in nuclear-age bread and circuses, bringing arms control no nearer. Yet if they convincingly satisfy the craving on both Atlantic shores for reassurance, they may do more to strengthen the hand of the West than a dozen MXs or B-1s.

New Accountability in Nigeria

This was the first Christmas in Nigeria's history, wrote a Lagos columnist, "when so many representatives of an entire generation of powerful and influential men will be singing their carols in jail." Therein lies the main achievement of the year of military rule that began with the coup of Dec. 31, 1983.

The idea of accountability has been reborn. spectacularly corrupt regime was overthrown. Also overthrown was the "received law" - to quote the columnist in the Lagos Guardian again - that if you belonged to the right class in society "your crimes may be visited on your property and your bank account but never on your person."

If the incarceration of hundreds of rich politicians has convinced a generation that it is a mistake to salt away millions from public funds, then General Mohammed Buhari has undoubtedly done some service to his state.

'The Era of Armaments Has Ended ...

W ASHINGTON — One day in March 1945, Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan sat down beside the desk of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in the Oval Office and noticed on FDR's desk a copy of a speech with a heavy line under these words: "If World War III unhappily arrives, it will open new laboratories of death too horrible to contemplate."

Within a month, FDR was dead, and in another four months the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima. Ever since, Americans of conscience have wrestled with the problems it posed.

Early on, the issue became bipolar, as the Soviet Union joined the nuclear club. By now the weaponry has so increased in force, numbers and accuracy that human life in the Northern Hemi-sphere, if not on the entire globe, could be destroyed in a nuclear exchange.

Having stood in the rubble of Hiroshima and Nagasaki three months after their destruction and having written about this subject for more than 30 years, I believe some points merit emphasis today as America and the Soviet Union again discuss what to do about nuclear weapons.

The United States and the U.S.S.R. are like "two scorpions in a bottle, each capable of killing the other, but only at the risk of his own life," as J. Robert Oppenheimer once put it.
To get out of that bottle. President Kennedy said, "we must re-examine our own attitude as individuals and as a nation," He meant that the problem was political: that the scientific arrangements in any agreement to curb nuclear weaponry must rest on a political base acceptable to both superpowers. All these decades, the scientists have raced ahead of the political leaders and their diplomatic emissaries. We all know that American and Russian attitudes toward each other have been permeated with fear and hatred. Perhaps most Americans agree with President Reagan's characterization of the Soviet Union as "the focus of evil in the modern world." a country whose leaders "reserve unto themselves the right to commit any crime. to lie, to cheat." The spew of fear and hatred the other way round, based on Marxist-Leninist dogma, has been no less intense. At times, as in the numerous crises over Berlin and the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, the superpowers have seemed to be moving inexorably to the brink. It was Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev

By Chalmers M. Roberts

who remarked, after Cuba, that "there was a who remained and Cuba that the was a smell of burning in the air."

Mr. Khrushchev drew an important lesson from Cuba. In the following year the Societ Communist Party adopted his new formulation that "the atomic bomb does not adhere to the class principle" (i.e., it will not destroy just the capitalists); "it destroys everybody within the range of its devastating force" (us Communists. too). Both sides now have long recognized that. Andrei Gromyko, the veteran Soviet foreign minister who met Secretary of State George Shultz this week in Geneva, has noted: "The systems of the control and direction of arms are becoming increasingly autonomous ... from the people who create them ... The govern-ment[s] must do everything possible to be able to determine the development of events and not to find themselves in the role of captives of events." Despite all the distrust, then, there exists a rational basis — self-preservation — for the superpowers to negotiate ways of lessening the chances of nuclear war. Now, in Geneva, we have conducted a new exploratory round.

We have been there before, beginning in 1946, when Bernard Baruch introduced the American plan for an international atomic energy agency with the somber Biblical words, "We are come to make a choice between the quick and the dead."

That moment, however, was not "ripe," as the diplomats say. Nor has it been ripe on subsequent occasions when one side or the other felt it was being locked into a dangerous inferiority. The two strategic arms limitation agreements, SALT-1 and -2 came at moments when the superpowers felt they were at rough parity.

William C. Foster, a wise American arms control negotiator, described the circumstances necessary for success as that moment when "the technological stars and planets" are "in favor-able conjunction, so to speak."

For three years President Reagan contended that America was in a state of inferiority, suffering from a dangerous "window of vulnerability."
The Shultz-Gromyko talks were possible only because Mr. Reagan in early 1984 began publicly to accept the notion of rough parity, although it is apparent that there are administration footdraggers, notably in the Pentagon.

Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger showed that agreement (SALT-1) was possible at a time of rough parity even if there were bitter political differences. Today, despite strong differences over Poland. Afghanistan, Central America, human rights and numerous other issues, nuclear parity has been evident enough to make the moment "ripe" for the Geneva meeting.

And "the technological stars and planets" are in conjunction: Mr. Reagan's "star wars" concept offers a bargaining chip, something to trade for a major lessening in the menace of the Kremlin's overwhelming number of land-based intercontinental nuclear missiles.

It is easy to be a pessimist, to feel that human history is so full of misperceptions and miscalculations that there is little reason to expect that Americans and Russians will not ultimately stumble into a holocaust.

Still, how can we do other than hope that, as President Eisenhower put it, the superpowers have "sense enough to meet at the conference table with the understanding that the era of armaments has ended and the human race must conform its actions to this truth or die?

Middle East: Look for a Crossroads Not Far Ahead

By Flora Lewis

PARIS - The Middle East is ap-Proaching another crossroads.

There have been many important changes in nearly two generations since the Jewish state was founded. But the timing never coincided in a way that could bring Israelis and Arabs closer to a settlement. Whenever one side neared a willingness to move the other wasn't ready. Now a small chance for approaching comwhelming military power.

mon ground appears on the horizon. Again, timing is everything. Egypt and Jordan are in a hurry. The Egyptian establishment, both supporters and critics of President Hosni Mubarak, is edgy. The surface is calm, but they note telltale signs of unrest in their country, which is normally placed but is capable of explosions. There is a sense of lack of direction.

of impatience seeking a new goal. They don't know what to do, and they look to Washington for inspira-tion. Many Arabs have swallowed the axiom that the United States cannot take any foreign policy initiative be-fore elections. So they figure that something must happen in 1985, or soon after, or they will be left to despair another four years. "Even a gimmick." one senior official pleaded, "but something soon, something to break the feeling that the peace process is stagnant."

Jordan's King Hussein is pressing because he realizes better than most that Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza are not frozen in time.

He fears that Israeli settlement in the areas is becoming an irreversible step to annexation, which would confront both Israelis and Palestinians with new catastrophes. He has moved with unaccustomed audacity in restoring relations with Egypt and hosting the Palestine National Council which aggravates tensions with Syria and costs him support from Saudi Arabia. He wants U.S. help to close Arab ranks behind him. There are signs that Israeli policy is moderating more than might have been expected under a fragile coalition government. But before Jerusa-

Israelis, with reason, have always wor-ried about instability in Arab countries as a potential flaw in any covert for peace and Ezer Weizman's new cabinet role of seeking contacts worry that moderates may be swept out by the return of a rampaging Ariel

Sharon at Israel's helm. So a favorable moment for the peace process may be coming, but it probably won't last long. It will be important for the United States to stretch the time available with delicate diplomacy, small steps of reas-surance for Israel and hope for Arabs. Then, when the time is ripe in a year or so, Washington should insist on negotiations. To make clear now that this is America's intention would help prevent another tragic slippage.

Middle East: Italians Busy Out in Front

R OME — For the first six months of 1985 Italy holds the presidency of the European Community's Council of Ministers. The Rome goverument seems determined to try to rally European support for an initiative in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Prime Minister Bettino Craxi has had a series of meetings with Arab leaders in the last two months. He has visited Riyadh, Cairo, Algiers and Tunis. Early last month be had a long meeting with Yasser Arafat at PLO beadquarters near Tunis. That visit was criticized by some members of the Italian coalition government and caused resentment in Israel.

Mr. Craxi was accompanied by Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti. The two men came home apparently convinced that Mr. Arafat had made a firm break with the more extremist members of his movement and might be ready to abandon armed struggle

By Enrico Jacchia with the Israelis and agree to formal recognition of the state of Israel as a condition for the start of Israeli-

Palestinian negotiations. An Arab League meeting expected soon in Riyadh would be an occasion to count the Arab states that would back Mr. Arafat if he took the plunge. Mr. Craxi's entourage has insisted that this rare opportunity ought not to be wasted. Mr. Craxi has had undisputed success in improving Italy's economic conditions and curbing the inflation rate. But he is aware of the limited political and diplomatic resources he commands in any foreign policy initiative — although he does have a long-established friendly relationship with Israel's Prime Minister Shimon Peres, a fellow social democrat, Italy's coalition government is split on the issue of Arab-Israeli negotiations. Most Christian Democrats and Socialists are believed to favor an Arafat-Hussein formula involving a Palestinian state on the West Bank, federated with Jordan. Formal security guarantees would be offered to Israel. The Israelis have so far rejected any suggestion of an independent Palestinian entity on their border.

The other side has its champion in Giovanni Spadolini, who has just visited Israel. In his public remarks in Israel and at home, Mr. Spadolini acknowledges a need for Palestinian "autonomy," but he systematically avoids the term "Palestinian state." Compromise between these two approaches would appear difficult. Still, an unexpected visit by Mr. Andreotti to King Hussein in Amman last weekend has indicated that supporters of the PLO-Jordan formula want to move quickly.

It is no secret that most West Eurowith the situation in the Middle East. But the first formal statement of EC policy on the Arab-Israeli conflict. the so-called declaration of Venice in 1980, was resented in Israel, which regarded it as pro-Arab. At the recent summit in Dublin, Italy's EC partners refused to give the Italians the mandate they sought for another Middle East initiative.

Mr. Craxi has gone ahead on his own, apparently believing that if Mr. Arafat can bring himself to make a concrete gesture toward Israel, several key West European governments would change their stance. The goal of an EC-supported initiative would be a confederation be-tween Jordan and a Palestinian state on the West Bank. If Mr. Craxi has his way, Washington could find itself with a difficult diplomatic choice to make in the Middle East. International Herald Tribune

The Press: Standards Too High?

By Philip Geyelin

P ARIS — While the libel cases brought in New York by General William Westmoreland and Ariel Sharon are heavy with legal implica-tions, they are equally heavy in their potential effect on relations between the public, the press and the makers of American foreign policy.

Such is the contrariness of the conservatives, fallen-away Democrats and others of right-wing persuasion in Ronald Reagan's legions that no matter who wins — the generals, CBS or Time magazine in whichever case - the press will take a beating. Libel denied will be proof positive that the "media" are destructively all-powerful. Libel damages awarded will only go to show that the news business is recklessly irresponsible in its reach for attention-getting sensations that enrich careers and bottom lines.

Public trust will be shaken once again. This will be largely the doing of ideologues in prominent places who would rather reinforce their misperceptions of how things work in the real world than get on with the busi-ness of making do with life that is unfair and with a world that is sometimes kindly and often cruel.

As documentary evidence, I offer an excerpt in a recent issue of Public Opinion magazine from a book to be published in the spring by Michael Ledeen, senior fellow at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies. The book's title, "Grave New World," is in tune with Mr. Ledeen's views on public opinion, the press and foreign policy. He worked briefly at the State Department for Alexander Haig. His intellectual connections include Henry Kissinger and Jeane Kirkpatrick. His jaundiced view of a freewheeling press is widely shared.

He starts with the proposition that "most top officials" begin the moming with compilations of press clip-pings; this conditions their day's work and has "more influence on politics than even the most secret intelligence." That is cause enough for anxiety, coming from a former insider. But you have to accept it if you are to entertain the rest of or official agreement. Arabs who take his reasons why the performance of some comfort from Mr. Peres's desire the press has a "devastating effect on our foreign policy."

This is so, the argument proceeds, because the press is afflicted by "ignorance of the world," "abstract moralism that permeates our popular culture" and, even worse, ambition. It directs its efforts at grabbing the attention of readers and viewers "not much interested in foreign news except as it affects them directly and dramatically." The result is a relentless search overseas for "an American angle," preferably scandalous.

So far, this is an arguable theory.

But when it is applied to coverage of foreign policy, the press becomes no better in Mr. Ledeen's eyes than the by Jeane Kirkpatrick: "They always olame America first."

Here is the heart of Mr. Ledeen's grievance and to the relevance of the ibel suits. The press is "super critical of our leaders, while foreign countries, including our worst enemies, often get surprisingly gentle treat-ment," he laments. "On the rare occasion that investigative journalism turns on other countries, the targets are typically friends and/or allies. Israel is cited as an example.

The stunning coincidence of these cases coming together in the same courthouse on Foley Square becomes powerful support for the argument that "the elite media have developed the leader of the Republican Party. a double standard for reporting the news," as Mr. Ledeen puts it. He acknowledges that there are "operational problems" for the American press in closed, totalitarian societies, but he does not allow these problems to get in the way of his conclusions: "The United States and its allies are held up against standards that are not applied to the Soviet Union and its satellites and proxies. Relatively minor human rights transgressions in friendly countries ... are given far more at-tention and subjected to more intense pean governments are uncomfortable criticism than are far graver examples of countries hostile to us."

Strictly speaking, Mr. Ledeen is right. Underlying the legal question in the Westmoreland trial is the proposition that American leaders are and ought to be held to a stricter standard of truthfulness and responsiveness to the public than, say, Soviet leaders will be. Because Americans prize Israel's democracy and help defend it by furnishing Israel with arms and economic aid, should they not be entitled to hold Israel to a higher accountability for what it does with those arms than would be applied, say, to Syria or Lybia, with whom America has no such relationship? Holding self and allies to different. higher standards, in short, is part of what those libel suits, whatever their outcome, are all about. As a general principle, I don't understand what Mr. Ledeen thinks is wrong with that. Washington Post Writers Group.

It is interesting to recall that the Assassins, whose name came from the Arabic for "hashish user," were fanatics who received, along with the promise of martyrdom, a supply of hashish before they at-tacked their victims. The erratic actions and the victims descriptions of the terrorists on the hijocked Kuwaitiairliner in Tehran last month suggest that the hijackers may have been high on hashish or some other drug.

Regarding "Gold Upturn Not Fore-seen in Near Term" (Jan. 1):

What is the meaning of the statement that "the price of gold has dropped more than 150 percent in less than five years"? If it had dropped by 100 percent, it would in my reckoning have come down to zero. Are we then to understand that gold is now fetching a negative price? There are precedents in the press for this imprecise and rather absurd formulation, e.g. "a devaluation of 400 percent." However, I have come to expect numeracy from the Inter-national Herald Tribune.

Musical Chairs: Who Plays the Tune?

WASHINGTON — The one thing you can be fairly sure of about these changes in the White House staff and the cabinet is that they were not planned by the president or approved by him until the day before they were announced. He does not like change, and why should he, having been re-elected by winning in 49 states with the old imposed their wishes and ambitions on him, and not vice versa. This is a lunny outfit. Everybody calls his own signals. Some, like Attorney General William French Smith, Judge William Clark and Mike Deaver, just take themselves out of the game. Others, like Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan, who should be fired, are allowed to stick around. Some, like the economic advisers, just drift away, and gang? The explanation is that they

the president lets them go or stay with a wave and a smile. There is a good argument for shaking up an administration after four years and switching officials from one job to another or letting them go when they are tired or hungry, but it is hard to figure the logic of the recent changes or de-cide who, if anybody, is in charge. Take the swap between Jim Baker as White House chief of staff and

tary. This is like telling the piano player or even the director of the orchestra to play the fiddle. Nobody around here really believes that President Reagan thought Secretary Regan would be a better White House chief of staff than Mr. Baker. Or that he thought Mr. Baker, at least for a while, would be able to testify in Congress as effectively as Mr. Regan about the administration's mystifying policies on how to get rid of the alarming budget and trade deficits. But Jim Baker — like Howard Baker of Tennessee, the former Republican leader of the Senate was bored with the endless task of pulling the president's chestnuts out of the fire, and wanted out. Mr. Reagan did not want them to go. He had to persuade them to stick, accommodate them or lose them. He did not persuade them.

What is particularly interesting is why James Baker insisted on leaving the White House - and he did insist, although he denies it — just when Edwin Meese, Judge Clark, Jeane Kirkpatrick and the other conservative supporters of the president were resigning and leaving the White House to the moderates like Vice President Bush, whose campaign against Mr. Reagan in 1980 was run by James Baker.

It clearly was not that the president wanted or urged Mr. Baker to leave. The guess here is that Mr. Baker was tired of the endless feuds between Secretary of State Shultz and Secretary of Defense Weinberger over foreign and defense policy. and the quarrels between conservatives and moderates in his own party over the budget deficit. Mr. Baker is not the first and will surely not be the last to opt out of this confusing policy tangle. Dave

Stockman, the budget director, will probably be next to go. Mr. Shultz their public support of Senator Jesse Helms was more important than their diplomatic responsibilities. Most important, the balance of power between the president and is trying to weed out those right-wing ambassadors who thought

Congress is changing. It is not only that the Democrats retain a major-ity in the House, but that the Senate now in control of Republican leaders who question not only the president's domestic economic policies but also wonder about his defense and foreign policies.

The resignation of Mr. Reagan's closest friends and advisers in the White House and the cabinet have added to his problems. Even the Republican leaders in Congress are asking why so many are leaving him and why so many others who are staying insist on taking jobs he really does not want them to have. The more the members of the cabinet, the White House staff and gress look at recent presidents like Ronald Reagan or Jimmy Carter, the more they begin to think in the night that they could do the job themselves and maybe even better.

The two Bakers are not immune to this dream. Howard of Tennes-see went back home to run for president in 1988. James, tired of the anonymity of the White House, will now be out front as secretary of the Treasury, testifying on the Hill and appearing on television. He will not have the power he had in the White House, but he will have the publicity. That, unfortunately, seems to be e most important aspect of presidential politics these days.

WALL STREET WATCH

An 'Ominous' Precedent For Reagan's New Term

By EDWARD ROHRBACH International Herald Tribune

ALVIN Coolidge was president and the "business of America was business" the last time share prices rose on Wall Street during the first year of a Republican's new presidential term. That was 60 years ago.

"It's ominous," said Robert H. Stovall, Dean Witter's director of portfolio strategy. "All Republican presidents since 1925 have presided over declining markets in the years of their inaugura-

While no one ever accused Ronald Reagan of being reticent Wall Street seems to be detecting a growing resemblance between him and Coolidge, who was known as "Silent Cal." Ralph Bloch technical analyst at Moseley Hallgarten, notes that the percent age of market advisory ser-strongly suggests that it is very difficult to envision a major leg north with more than 60 percent of the advisers looking for it."

Amid the widespread optimism, it is not easy to find the bearish view. There is Richard J. Hoffman, who runs an investment firm in New Jersey. But even he sees stocks up sharply in the

"The bullish case is growing because value is there — but the real question is sustainability," he said.

Mr. Hoffman said there seemed to be a growing trend toward "a vision of thirvana" amid "belief in continued low inflation and an extended business cycle." He added, however, that "in our analysis the extended cycle scenario will not come true. Instead, the economy will enter a recession in early 1986 following a vicious spiral of rising inflation, rising rates and a falling dollar. As a consequence, the euphoria will evaporate as rates begin to rise in the spring."

HE ride up, however, which Mr. Hoffman sees happening in spurts, will elevate the Dow average to new highs, peaking in March between 1,350 and 1,400.

He interprets as positive the news that Donald T. Regan and James A. Baker 3d will switch jobs at the Treasury Department and the White House. He said that Wall Street's "main hangup" this winter has been its doubts on whether U.S. government plans for dealing with the tax issue and the federal deficit were

The biggest current error in the conventional wisdom on the market, he said, is the assumption that not enough funds are available to fuel a significant advance. "But when the time comes for the market to go up, the cash will come from other sources,"

But Mr. Hoffman also warns that after peaking this spring, the stock market is likely to fall precipitously: "There is a serious risk of black holes of illiquidity forming during the rush for the exit." So his investment strategy is to avoid the risk of playing volatile stocks that promise to jump the highest in the "sucker rally" he foresees. By March he advises a portfolio 37 percent in cash and the remainder "in a very defensive posture," comprising utilities such as telephone issues. J. Anthony Boeckh, editor of the Bank Credit Analyst, which is published in Montreal, also takes a cautious attitude toward Wall Street. He believes that "technical factors suggest vulnerability in

Test Seen Nearing For OPEC

Study Predicts Financial Ills

NEW YORK - OPEC's campaign to maintain its price structure is approaching a major test in the financial markets, according to analysts at Salomon Brothers Inc.

"The weak links in the chain are already close to breaking," says a research report on the bond market. The study, released Wednesday, was prepared by Graham Bishop, who is based in London, and Paul Mlotok, who is headquartered in New York.

They said the test will be a financial one "because OPEC's needs are measured in dollars of export revenue, rather than barrels per day required to balance the physical oil

Separately, APS, the official Algerian news agency, said Wednes-day that 13 ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries are to hold an extraordinary meeting in Geneva on Jan. 28. The agency said ministers are to discuss controls on oil output and prices and price differentials on various kinds of petroleum.

The Salomon analysts said the richer OPEC countries - Kuwait, Libya, Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates - have absorbed all the reduction in export revenues since 1982 but the poorer nations have accounted for the bulk of the delicits.

Because these poorer nations are unlikely to be able to finance their limited to cutting imports, cheating on oil prices and quotas, ceasing to service their debt or receiving large financial grants from rich OPEC countries, the Salomon analysts

They said there will be a progressively greater risk of a decline in oil prices as financial pressures on the weaker OPEC members intensify. But "a major price cut is unlikely to for two years or more," while "the need to cut imports, or borrow "Bonds have had a ni more, will be immediate" for these for stocks to get going." poorer nations, the authors said.

Bonds Slipping From Favor in U.S.

By Fred R. Bleakley New York Times Service

1982

* Money market instrument

NEW YORK - Investors in the U.S. stock market have plenty of worries, ranging from the size of the saying the decline in interest rates is finished. federal deficit to the longevity of the American economic advance. But more money managers these days are creeping back into stocks for one simple reason: Bonds have become less competitive.

"The easy money has been made in the bond market," said Martin D. Sass, president of M.D. Sass Investors Services Inc. He was referring to the big decline in interest rates in the last seven months of 1984, which resulted in a run-up in bond prices.

Indeed, bonds clearly were the place to be during that period. While the average stock in the Standard & Poor's 500 returned 14.3 percent, with dividends in-cluded, long-term Treasury bonds scored nearly twice as well, racking up a return, including interest income and price change, of 27.3 percent. For the entire year, bonds also held the edge, 13.2 percent to 6.2 percent.

But, Mr. Sass said, "Now is not the time to bet the projected deficits, their options are ranch on bonds." He is shifting $100 million into equities, as he whittles down his company's cash account and reduces the bond portion of its $1.5billion portfolio to 40 percent, from 50 percent. Until a few weeks ago, Charles H. Brunie, chairman of the Oppenheimer Capital Corp., also believed that bonds were more attractive. But now he expects that stocks will perform about as well as fixed-income securities this year. His company, which has about $5.5 billion in pension assets under management, is buying $100 million in bonds and putting an extra $250 million to work in stimulate additional consumption the stock market, especially in consumer-oriented issues, such as Best Products Co. "Bonds have had a nice move," he said. "It's time

Few people, however, expect stocks to take off soon.

In fact, indecision appeared to grip both the stock and the bond markets last week as prices bounced erratically. And many investment professionals are not

But compared to stocks, "the outperformance of bonds is over," said John A. Mendelson, group head of market analysis for Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "There's something left in bonds, but there's more potential in stocks," he stated.

Many professional investors, including H. Kent Atkins, chief investment officer of Bankers Trust Co., are now taking their cue from projections of expected performance from the three key investment choices stocks, bonds and short-term cash investments. Mr. Atkins, for instance, who oversees the investment of about $12 billion in assets of pension funds and other institutions, said his bank expects stocks to return 16.5 percent this year, bonds 13 percent and short-term cash securities 9 percent. Usually, say the experts, the odds favor stocks when they are expected to produce an annual gain of better than 2.5 percentage points more than high-quality bonds. If the expected gains for both stocks and bonds were about even, the odds would favor bonds because they are considered less risky.

For those investors with discretion over where they put their money, the asset-allocation models they use to guide them in choosing the proper mixture of stock, bond and cash investments strongly favored bonds over stocks around mid-1984.

Suresh Bhirud, chief portfolio strategist for First Boston Corp., noted that at the end of last May, bonds were weighted heavily in the mixture because the thencurrent yield of long-term Treasury bonds alone was 13.9 percent annually, while his expected total return (Continued on Page 9, Col. 1)

U.S. Jobless Rate Edged Higher In December rose to 6.3 percent last month from civilian work force in December as a surge in Americans looking for work surpassed the creation of about 340,000 new jobs during the month, the government reported Wednesday.

The number of Americans actually holding jobs in December rose to a record 106.3 million, but the total of unemployed increased to 8.2 million as the labor force expanded by 390,000, the Labor Department report said.

The department also revised the jobless figures for the two preceding months, which had originally shown the unemployment rate declining to 7.2 percent in November from October's 7.4 percent. Wednesday's report revised those figures to 7.3 percent for October and 7.1 percent for November. Meanwhile, the number of "discouraged workers," those without jobs but not counted as unemployed because they have given up looking, increased to 1.3 million from the September level of 1.2 million, the department said.

A year-end slowdown in U.S. economic growth had led many economists to expect that the jobless rate would either rise a bit or remain flat in December. But widespread predictions of at least somewhat faster growth early in this new year suggested that the unemployment increase will be short-lived.

The unemployment rate, which reached 10.7 percent near the end of the 1981-82 recession, dropped to a revised 7.2 percent last June but bounced back to 7.5 percent before beginning to decline again.

An alternate overall unemployment rate, which combines the 114.5 million-member civilian labor force with the roughly 1.7 million members of the armed forces stationed in the United States, rose to 7.1 percent from 7 percent.

The biggest gains in employment were a hike of 95,000 in businesses providing services and an increase of 85,000 among manufacturers. Among specific groups, the Labor Department reported that the 6.2 percent in November, while the ment edged up to 7.2 percent of the rate for adult women slipped to 6.4 percent from 6.5 percent.

For whites of both sexes, the department said, the rate rose to 6.2 percent from 6.1 percent; for blacks, it fell to 15 percent from 15.1 percent, and for hispanics, the rate rose to 10.2 percent from 10.1

Among black teenagers, the group with the highest unemployment, the jobless rate was 42.1 percent, up from 41.2 percent in No-

Before Wednesday's announce ment, analysts said that slowerthan-anticipated retail sales conceivably could contribute to pushing up the unemployment rate a tenth of a percentage point or so.

The nation's largest retailers all reported increases in December Christmas sales from a year ago, but the levels were disappointing because they were less than many retailers had hoped, financial analysts said.

New claims for unemployment compensation benefits, one indicator of the health of the U.S. labor market, rose by 5,000 to 405,000 in the week ended Dec. 22, the Labor Department reported last week.

Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics, said in testimony prepared for a Wednes-day hearing of the congressional Joint Economic Committee that, after seasonal adjustment, the retail segment of the job market posted no gains last month. She noted, however, hefty increases in retail employment in October and No-

She added that five industries had December employment levels actually lower than at the official end of the recession in November 1982 — mining, steel, tobacco, pe-troleum and coal, and leather.

She also said two-thirds of the increase in job creation in the last two years was in services, and that the goods-producing sector, very few industries had added more than the number of jobs lost during unemployment rate for adult males the recession."

Pirated Recordings Big Business in Portugal

By Ken Portinger
International Herald Tribune

LISBON — Rogério P., a Lisbon gypsy, has profitably hawked pirated music cassettes on the Praça de Espanha for the past four years and says that his trade, out of a suitcase, makes him a good living.

His wares, priced today at 180 escudos (about $1.05) each, cost only a third of the genuine article. His pitch is lucratively repeated by hundreds of other hawkers on street corners and at fairs around

The peddlers are supplied by a backstreet growth industry that is moving its products into the U.S. and European markets, causing big headaches for international recording companies.

The cassette pirates, thought to produce more than 7 million illegal articles a year, have become priority targets for the legitimate industry, which in a recent report cast Portugal as the major European center for pirated recordings.

Patrick W. Hurley, European vice president for operations for CBS Records, a subsidiary of New York-based CBS Inc. and a giant in the record and tape business, said

Pound Recovers Early Losses; Dollar Higher

The Associated Press LONDON - The British pound sank against the dollar Wednesday before rebounding late in the session, while the dollar gained against several other key currencies. In London, sterling fell to $1.138 in the morning before recovering to $1.142 at the ciose. The pound closed at $1.1485 Tuesday.

The pound's decline followed reports that Britain was selling its North Sea oil on the spot market at less than the official price, Paul Neild, chief economist for British stockbrokers Phillips & Drew, said the pound also was weak because British interest rates were being held

In Tokyo, where trading ends before it begins in Europe, the dollar rose to 255 yen from 253.725 Tuesday. Other late dollar rates in Eu-

that his company was among the hardest hit. "For the past decade, Portugal has figured as the top producer of pirated cassettes and as a major illegal exporter of pop records, at a financial loss to the European industry last year alone of as much as $20 million," he said in a recent interview in Lisbon. Mr. Hurley said that the illegality lies in contraventions of contract restrictions between the licensee and the licensor that limit production and sales of a particular recording to the Portuguese mar-

Local recording industry chiefs have been battling the pirates and peddlers for several years. However, they complain that legal sanctions against the pirates and peddlers are derisory.

Carlos Pinto, head of the Portuguese branch of the London-based International Federation of the Phonographic Industry, said that fines for peddlers were laughable because suppliers guaranteed them free replacement of any cassettes confiscated in police raids.

Luis Francisco Rebelo, president of the Portuguese Society of Authors - the national copyright organization - said that recording artists in Portugal were losing millions of escudos a year through the activities of pirates. "An artist receives approximately 8 percent of the sale price of each record or cassette. If we consider that 80 percent of the Portuguese cassette market is pirated, we get an idea of how much money is at stake," he said,

The society has triggered a number of successful police raids against illegal cassette sellers, and it said that a new, stronger law protecting the property of artists and intellectuals is due to be passed by the Portuguese parliament early this year.

However, industry sources believe that until heavy prison sentences are imposed on the pirate chiefs, whose activities are said to be well documented by private investigators, the business will continue to flourish The maximum sentence upon conviction for music piracy is now a year in jail. The Portuguese branch of the phonographic trade group recently stepped up pressure on the government to put an end to pirate activities. And a senior Portuguese treasury official assured Mr. Hurley of CBS that the government was doing its best to implement anti-piracy laws,

"So they should," said Mr. Hurley, who estimated that the Portuguese tax authorities lost the equivalent of $1.6 million last year in (Continued on Page 13, Col. 5)

Union Carbide Assails Lowering Of Its Debt Rating

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Union Carbide

Corp. has complained that the low-ering of its debt rating by Standard & Poor's Corp. was excessive and

S&P said Tuesday that Union Carbide debt was being revised to the lowest investment grade because of the gas leak Dec. 3 at the company's plant in Bhopal, India Union Carbide's senior long-term debt was lowered to BBB plus from A, its subordinated long-term debt to BBB from A minus, and its commercial paper to A-2 from A-1.

"We don't believe the action was warranted by the facts or legal analysis of the Indian situation," said J. Clayton Stephenson, executive vice president and chief financial officer of Union Carbide. S&P said the change was necessary not so much because of the company's potential liability for the gas leak, which killed more than 2,000 people, but because of the accident's potential "negative spallover" onto suppliers and customers; because management attention would be diverted into defending against lawsuits, and because of the company's "constrained access to capital markets." Mr. Stephenson denied all of those assertions. He said that only a few Union Carbide managers were handling the Bhopal situa-tion, and that the company had only minimal refinancing needs.

As of the end of the third quarter of 1983, Union Carbide had $2.28 billion in long-term debt.

What makes Morgan the most innovative bank in both the Eurobond and syndicated loan markets

When the leading participants in the world's capital markets were asked by Euromoney magazine which bank is the most innovative in the international bond and syndicated loan markets—"the best house for introducing successful new techniques"—Morgan ranked first in both areas.

"Morgan is a corporate finance-driven merchant bank, (which) may explain some of its inventiveness," Euromoney wrote in its commentary on the poll results. "It tends to see the securities business from a company's point of view; its corporate finance officers estimate how the bank's forex, swap and Eurobond capabilities can minimize costs and meet the particular needs of the client company."

Morgan has earned this recognition by putting our uniquely comprehensive set of capabilities to work for the long-term interests of our clients.

As a major participant in the capital, credit, and local currency markets, as well as in worldwide foreign exchange, government bond, and bullion markets, we have exceptional opportunities for exploiting intermarket arbitrage for the benefit of our clients in innovative ways.

Morgan is the leading counterparty that can act with equal proficiency as either principal or agent in rate and currency swap transactions. Our especially strong capital position, reflected in our AAA/Aaa credit ratings, enhances our role as principal and can reduce client costs and risks in each swap we arrange.

☐ Because Morgan concentrates on the international capital markets, we can devote all our worldwide resources to providing superior service in these markets to our clients.

A recent example of Morgan innovation:
For a $500 million Kingdom of Sweden floating-rate note issue, our Eurobond underwriting subsidiary, Morgan Guaranty Ltd, proposed the first U.S. Treasury-style auction in the international capital markets, then committed to place a competitive bid for the entire issue. The package gave Sweden the lowest cost related to the London Inter-Bank Deposit Bid Rate ever achieved in the Eurodollar floating-rate note market. And its success led to a second Swedish auction issue, for $700 million.

Other recent examples: profitable Deutschemark defeasance transactions for three major U.S. issuers, and zero-coupon Eurobond issues which we swapped into floating-rate funding for Electricité de France, Nordic Investment Bank, and Swedish Export Credit.

Measure our performance. Let us compete for your mandate. You'll find we deliver imaginative, cost-effective services in the capital markets with the same high quality and skill that have long been hallmarks of all Morgan banking business.

Profit Sharing To Be Cut at GM

New York Times Service

DETROIT - General Motors Corp. production workers, who were told during union-contract negotiations last summer that they could expect to receive about $1,000 in profit sharing for 1984, will get only about half that amount, the company says Company officials said Tuesday that profit sharing is likely to amount to about $550 per worker this year, or $90 less than the average $640 paid in 1983, even though 1984 profits are expected to approach $5 bil-lion against the $3.7 billion earned in 1983.

GM officials said the reasons for the decline, despite the larger profits, are the effects of strikes last fall at plants in the United States and against GM in Canada and the larger number of mathematical and the larger number of mathematical in the larger numbe ber of workers dividing up the profit-sharing pool. GM has called back about 100,000 factory workers since the end of 1983.

AUGUST STRINDBERG

By Olof Lagercrantz. Translated by Anselm Hollo, 399 pp. $25.50. Farrar Straus Giroux, 19 Union Square

West, New York, N. Y. 10003.

Reviewed by Eva Hoffman

O'NE can hardly imagine a more fascinating, or a more formidable biographical subject than August Strindberg. Aside from writing some of the most powerful dramas to visit the stage at any time, he dramatized his own life with an uninhibited flair that sometimes verged on the bathetic, and sometimes came close to a form of insanity.

The extreme volatility of his temperament was accompanied by an egotism that led him from manic peaks of self-esteem to abysses of humiliation and despair. His relations with women and his attitudes toward them are, of course, rich material for a psychoanalytic casestudy — a study that Strindberg himself was constantly pursuing and reformulating in a prodigious body of work.

Lagercrantz, a Swedish poet and literary critic and the first scholar to undertake a major biography of Strindberg in decades, touches on all these multiple strands in his subject's life and character. Unfortunately, he doesn't delve into them with either the analytic or the imaginative forcefulness required to convey and comprehend Strindberg's intense struggles and contradictions. The result is an informative, but oddly flat study of this most highly etched of personalities. Indeed, Lagercrantz's prevailing attitude is one of cautious and almost hostile skepticism. Strindberg, Lagercrantz contends, was basically a poseur, always creating scenarios and personae that fueled his art, but that had only a enuous correspondence to the realities of his life. Autobiographical works like "The Serving Maid's Son" are treated as a fabric of self-deceptions and sentimental exaggerations. While that work's first chapter is titled "Afraid and Hungry." Lagererantz notes, in fact. Strindberg grew up in a relatively well-to-do household. Even his father's bankruptcy didn't cause the family much hardship. And while Strindberg continually emphasized his youthful loneliness, there is plenty of evidence that he was sociable and surrounded by good Strindberg, Lagercrantz tells us, got into the habit of presenting himself as the victimized, persecuted genius — a habit that may account for the virulence of his attacks on his putative enemies in such confessional works as the stories in "Marrying," or the highly provoca-tive novel "A Fool's Apology." But while it may be true that Strindberg delighted in of-fending the sensibilities of the bourgeois Swedes of his day, he certainly succeeded with a vengeance that gave credence to his paranoia. His works often went unpublished and were sometimes censored. At best, they caused scandal and high moral outrage - even while the artist was becoming ever more of a celebrity. Lagercrantz is equally intent on unmasking

Strindberg's recurring spiritual crises and dark nights of the soul. For example, referring to Strindberg's letter that suggests suicidal im-pulses, he writes that it is "a literary product," and that "his alleged state of extreme agitation is described with remarkable linguistic control." But again, even if there was method in Strindberg's madness, that does not preclude the possibility that the state was genuine.

Early on, Strindberg referred to himself as "unmanly"; he was obssessed by the size of his penis, and equally preoccupied by his own creative powers, which he described in un-equivocal metaphors of birth and fertility. As he grew older, the sense of his "unmanliness" gave way to an almost mystical and, at the same time, very modern conviction that human identity is hardly a unified entity, but a swirl of colliding, nearly impersonal particles and parts. In a late novel, "The Roof-Raising," he wrote, "His own ego dissolved, and the innate character was seen to have been the mask behind which he had played his part, created by assimilation or conditions of life, and according to the law of the greatest exchange of psychic elements."

In such observations, Strindberg looks forward to the later perceptions of psychoanaly-sis, and to such writers as D. H. Lawrence or James Joyce. It would have been illuminating if Lagercrantz had placed Strindberg in a wider llectual context - if he had told us something about the dramatic soil from which his naturalistic plays emerged, or analyzed his impact on such later artists as Eugene O'Neill and Ignmar Bergman. As it stands, the biography is probably most useful in pointing us to the great variety of Strindberg's work — in reminding us that he was a forward-looking painter, an ethnographer, journalist, historian, amateur scientist, and author of many hardly remembered novels and plays. There remains a Strindberg still to be discovered.

But by then Zoeller and other familiar tour stars may find they have some new rivals for fans' attention. For in 1985 they may be facing one of the strongest foreign invasions in the history of the PGA tour, an invasion led by Greg Norman and Seve Ballesteros, two well known foreign stars, and joined by Denis Watson, Tommy Nakajima and Bernhard Langer.

Zoeller won the Open last June during five painful rounds at Winged Foot beating Australia's Norman in the 18-hole playoff. During the tournament he had to overcome constant pain in his back, and he wore a specially built electric belt at night to give himself

But the condition deteriorated, and Zoeller could not tee it up for the PGA Championship at Shoal Creek, Alabama, in August, The back pain was so intense that he was hospitalized in Birmingham. Alabama, the night before the tournament began. On Sept. 25, he underwent surgery to repair two ruptured spinal disks.

Last week Zoeller's doctor told him he could begin to practice a

Jarryd and Kriek Take Openers of N.Y. Tennis

NEW YORK - The Swedish battle went the way John McEnroe thought it would, not the way he wanted it to. When Tuesday night's tournament was completed, it was Anders Jarryd who had advanced to a quarterfinal meeting against McEnroe, the event's defending champion and No. 1 seed. Jarryd, in command at the net, beat Henrik Sundstrom, his Swedish Davis Cup teammate, 6-4, 6-1 before Johan Kriek ousted 17-yearold Aaron Krickstein, 7-5, 6-3.

The first round was to conclude Wednesday with Swede Joakim Nystrom playing Vitas Gerulaitis and Eliot Teltscher meeting Czechoslovak Tomas Smid. The top four seeds, led by McEnroe. await the first-round winners in the quarterfinals of the season-ending

Singing in the Rain ...'

WASHINGTON — Well, everyone seems to be back in town, not only the winners, but the losers in last November's election. The victors have taken their seats in the U.S. House of Representatives and the Senate, and the losers have taken theirs in one of Washington's 100,000 prestigious law firms.

Ex-Congressman Turtleback is one of the losers, if you call making with Tort & Tort a losing proposiion.

"I thought you'd go back to Wietful County after you lost your seat," l

"You ever been in Wistful

"Can't say that I have," I admitted. "All I know about it is what you said on the floor of the House -that it was United States's biblical Garden of Eden."

Buchwald

"I'm not on the floor anymore, and Wistful County is the pits. I'm not just saying that because I lost the election after serving the people there for 20 years. It was the pits when I first came to Congress, and it's the pits now."

"Did you ever practice law before you got elected to public of-

"No. and I don't intend to practice it now. I'm going to be the rainmaker at Tort & Tort." 'What's a rainmaker?'

"The fellow that makes it rain new business on the firm because of the people he knows. I may be out of office but I still have friends who owe me a few favors."

"Then you're going to be an influence peddler.'

"Never. My job is to provide advice and consent to the private sector which can't operate under the oppressive laws passed by a vindictive anti-business Congress, he said. "Clients will come to me, not because of the influence I still wield, but because of my expertise in getting around the overbearing rules and regulations I demanded when I served the people."

"I can see where Tort & Tort would want you to be a partner in their firm," I said. "Will you also provide lobbying services?

"You can't be a rainmaker in Washington if you are not willing to stand up for the things your clients believe in. The reason excongressmen and ex-senators are in demand by Washington law firms is that we have access to our former colleagues on the floor, not to mention the use of the congressional dining rooms and the gym. It's amazing how much law you can practice when you're doing Jane Fonda exercises with the chairman of a House or a Senate committee."

"And they don't treat you any differently because you are no longer a member of Congress?"

"They treat you better, because now that you're with a big law firm you are a potential source of funds for their future political campaigns.

What about the administration? How do they look on you?" "Kindly. If you were a former Republican congressman, they want to make it up to you for losing your election. And if you were a former Democratic congressman. they are so delighted that you are no longer in opposition that they'll go overboard to show they don't bold grudges."

"You can't say Washington doesn't take care of its own."

"Had I known then what I know now I would have lost an election 10 years ago," he said.

The phone rang and Turtleback picked it up. "Willy, how are you? How are things at Wistful Tools? You don't say? The Navy refuses to pay you for the Snail Darter tool kit? ... They claim you overcharged them by $10 million? No problem, Willy, we'll not only get your money, but we'll get an apology from the Pentagon. Turtleback hit the Tort & Tort timer on his deck and they said. his desk and then said, "Tell me the story.

After 20 minutes he hung up and winked at me. Then he broke into song: "I'm singing in the rain, sing-ing in the rain. What a glorious feeling, da de, da da da."

'Personal Trainers' Shape Up Clients in Latest Fitness Fad

New York Times Service

N EW YORK — To some they are "the new therapists." To others they are one of the status symbols of the 1980s. To most people who employ them they are the prime molivators for whipping a flabby body into shape.

They are personal trainers, muscled men and women who stand over their clients in gyms or private homes and exhort them to do "just five more" repetitions on the exercise machines. The clients, moaning and sweating, strain to do those final reps. After all, they don't want to disappoint their trainers.

"Trainers are the new thera-pists," said Susan L. Schulman, 39, a CBS Entertainment executive. "It has to do with the whole psychological thing of bringing you to a vulnerable state. You let go of all the veneer. During my workouts. I tell them all sorts of personal things, about my love

Patti and Gibby Cohen with hanging Risa Steinberg in inversion boots. life and stresses at work. And Billie Jean King, John McEnroe when I leave, I'm more relaxed." and Roberta Flack. Schulman does her one-hour workouts twice a week with Patti and Gibby Cohen at the glearning new Polygym. The 24-hour gym, on the second floor of a brownstone, is open only to trainers and their clients and will book no more than eight trainer-client teams at a time. The trainers pay $20 an hour for the gym, and the clients in turn pay the trainers anywhere from $50 to $100 an

The Cohens — she is 38 and he is 41 — are among that small group of trainers who charge $100 an hour for their services. Another trainer at Polygym, Theresa Lamb, 33, also charges that amount. The gym is offering a $15,000 gift certificate, good for one new body." It entitles the bearer to one year of three onehour workouts a week with a $100-an-hour trainer. The Cohens. like many trainers, got their start at the Sports Training Institute in New York. Their clients include the actor Burgess Meredith, the actress Carlin Glynn and Stephen D. Hassenfeld, chairman of the Hasbro Bradley toy company. Cohen estimates there are 500 to 1,000 trainers in the city who work with clients one-to-one, either in gyms or in private homes.

None of the trainers is licensed or certified, because there is no accrediting procedure. Nor do they have any national organization. As a result anyone can call himself or herself a trainer.

"Yes, anyone can be a trainer." said Neal Reed, 36, who has been one for eight years. "But the proof is in the pudding. The only credential you have to have is that people keep coming back." Reed was an All-American basketball player at Pratt Institute, where he studied architecture. He was racing bicycles when he got his first job as a trainer at the Sports Training Institute. He is now a salaried trainer at twogyms, the Fifth Avenue Racquet Club and the Uptown Racquet Club and Fitness Center, His clients have included Arthur Ashe,

Reed said he trains 10 to 15

clients a day. Most of the men, he said, want to work on their abdomens, while the women are wor-ried that something is happening to their thighs. "And there usually is something happening to their thighs," he said.

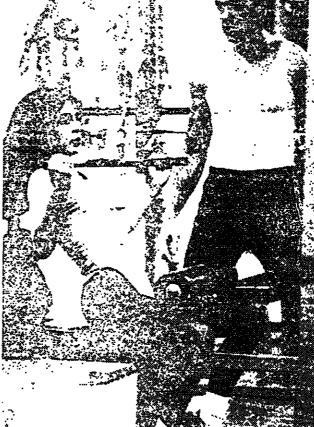

Speaking of the close relation-ships that often develop between trainer and client. Reed said: You get people in the machines who break down and cry. I had a woman one time whose father was treating her mother poorly. You have to read them and know you can't push them hard when they're having a bad day." An occupational hazard, several trainers agreed, is a client's becoming infatuated with a trainer, or vice versa. Reed said that before he got married, almost all the women he dated were clients. The basic way to meet girls was to train them," he said.

Tommy Colbert, on the other hand, said he tried to keep his relationship with his temale clients "very professional." He said the one time he got involved with a client "turned out disastrously - I lost the client, and I'll never make that mistake again."

Colbert, 27, has been described by one of his clients, the writer Gay Talese, as "the matinee idol of the Vertical Club." He trains people at that club, at Broadway Body Builders and in private homes. His monthly fee ranges from $240 to $500. Last winter he spent a month and a half in Tucson, Arizona, keeping Treat Williams and Kris Kristofferson in shape while the actors were making the film "Flashpoint."

Asked why he thought trainers had become so important to some people, Colbert said: "Some think it's prestigious and sort of a status symbol. I know I have three or four female clients who iust want to be seen with a handsome trainer. Manhattan is, after all, the glitter dome. But for the serious person, the motivation a trainer gives is unmatchable. We push and guide people beyond their limits. If you're there alone, you just won't do that last repeti-

Some people said they were drawn to trainers because many of them work in small, lesscrowded gyms where exercising. rather than socializing, is emphasized. "I come to Polygym because there aren't a lot of people in striped leotards lined up on fancy blue carpets waiting to use the machines," said Carlin Glynn, who is 44. "I have three kids, and I work all the time, and I just feel that an hour with a trainer is the most effective use of my time."

Some clients say there can be a sadistic element to the training, when a trainer tries to push a client too far. Most try to bring the client's muscles to a point known as muscle failure, on the theory that it is the best way to strengthen the muscles.

"Some trainers are sadistic." said Sallie Slate, director of pub-

Yul Bryuner has played the lead in "The King and I" more than 4,400 times since 1951, but he hasn't worn out his welcome on Broadway. The 64-year-old actor's farewell run as the king of Siam has become the New York theater season's first box office smash. When the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical opened at the Broadway Theater on Monday, the box office took in $266,556 and the line of ticket-buyers stretched around the

An attorney for John Heckler asserted that Heckler's wife of 30 ears, Margaret Heckler, 53, U.S. health and human services secretary, condemned his client to "a life of either celibacy or adultery." as Mrs. Heckler's divorce suit opened in Dedham, Massachusetts, Tuesday. The lawyer conceded that Heckler committed adultery but said it was not until four years after Mrs. Heckler refused to have sexual relations with him. Mrs. Heckler, first elected to Congress in 1966, "condoned" her husband's infidelity to keep the marriage together, the attorney added. "She wanted at all costs to avoid a divorce which would harm her political career. Her political ambitions were all-consuming." "Margaret Heckler's main concern is to protect the dignity of the marriage, the children and the family," one of Mrs. Heckler's lawyers said later. "The whole issue here is essentially a financial one." Mrs. Heckler said before the trial opened. Her husband operates an investment business. The trial is expected to last two weeks.
